The necessary two-thirds having voted in favor of the measure it was declared adopted, notwithstanding the veto of the mayor.

[As will be seen in the report of select council proceedings, the bill failed to secure the necessary vote in that body, and therefore fails to become a law.]

After the vote had been taken Mr. Hays rose and indignantly repudiated the assertions of the mayor, charging the committee with breaking the law. He was not going to sit and listen to such language without protesting. Select Council Business.

From select council were reported a number of papers acted on in that body. among them the resolution adopted at the special meeting held June 23, referring the matter of lighting the city with gas back to the lamp committee to invite new proposals, together with the communications from the Lancaster gas company and the Lancaster gaslight and fuel company. Mr. Franklin rose for information concerning the extensive repairs at the reservoir, which he understood to involve a large amount of money, and which had never been ordered by councils.

Mr. Brown, of the water committee, replied at length, defending the course of the water committee in making these repairs, claiming them to be necessary and important, and said that the work will be well done, though it is of greater magnitude than at first anticipated by the committee, who had found, instead of a small fissure, a serious leak in the bed of the basin which required instant attention.

And How He Was Done For.

Net gain....

We briefly noticed yesterday that a Lancaster county innocent had been taken in and done for at the bunko game by some sharps in Reading. The Reading Eagle gives the following particulars of the game: Aaron Eitnier, hailing from Lincoln,

Lancaster county, was walking along Penn street, when he was accosted by a man, an entire stranger to him, who ran up to him, and heartily shook him by the hand saying: "How d'you do?" Mr. Eitnier replied that he had the better of him, as he was not aware that he had met stones so as to make the said sidewalks con-form to the increased width provided for in him before. Mr. Eitnier formerly kept Section 1; and that in default thereof the Street Committee shall have such curbstones set as provided for by existing ordinances, at the cost of the said owners of property, a hotel in this city, and is well known here. "Oh, replied the stranger," I know you very well." He then went on to say Siz. III. That from and after the passage of that his father, Horatio Trexler, president of the Farmers' bank, was very well acquainted with Mr. Eitnier, and that he, the for surveying and changing city plans, as though he could do nothing better than son, was often at his place when he kept in Reading. He inquired after Mr. Eitnier's family and their general welfare, and was very solicitous to know all about them. Matters ran on in this way when the supposed Mr. Trexler told Mr. Eitnier that he was about leaving the city for the hot season and that he had two beautiful oil paintings, which he desired to get rid of, and he present them to his father's old friend. Capital idea! They would be just the things to adorn his Lancaster county place. Would Mr. Eitnier step down this street and look at them? Certainly. While on the way the stranger informed Mr. Eitnier that he had been very successful in a lottery, plicate (for which his bid had been $25) and that he might just as well draw the money now. They would then look at the The petition of Bernard Bergey, a resi- pictures. He took Mr. Eituier to the room on Court street above Fifth, where the stranger's confederate sat behind a small desk, twirling his mustache, and looking very unconcerned. Mr. Eitnier's friend laid down his lottery ticket and received in return a roll of bills amounting to several hundred dollars. The lottery dealer asked him to take another chance, but the supposed Mr. Trexler replied, "Oh, no, and was about to depart, when he was called back and shown some of the prizes in the envelopes before him. One picked up at random contained $380. By Jove! Mr. Eitthat was something trying for. nier was asked to take a chance. He was not slow in gathering his senses, how-ever, and immediately informed the police of his loss.
